BLOOMING MARVELLOUS

Ten thousand saw I at a glance. Not daffodils like in William Wordsworth's poem, but beautiful blooms indigenous to India. All of 10 sq. km, 1,200 metres above sea level, the Kaas Plateau Reserved Forest in Maharashtra is a UNESCO Natural World Heritage Site (part of the Western Ghats citation). It comes into its own in late August to October every year, with rain-kissed meadows and 850 varieties of dewy blossoms stretching away to the horizon. Of these, 40 are found only here, while 650 are on the endangered list. Entrance is limited to 3,000 visitors a day. Book a slot online at www.kas.ind.in.

Priya Pathiyan

INDIA PICTURE