

Vasquito Alvares and Anisha Hassan recently launched Casa Lusitana, offering Indo-Portuguese fare. The popular Rua 31 de Janeiro street is where Chef Pablo Miranda runs Antonio@31 with innovative Goan fare, and the yakitori bar Makutsu. Opposite Don Bosco School is where Arati Naik started her passion project, the tapas bar Isabella's. Nearby is Kokum Curry, a branch of the popular restaurant in Candolim doing Goan food; and Mummai, serving homely Goan fare. Near the municipal garden is the gastro-bar Petisco, run by Pranav Dhuri. The Dhuri family is known for the iconic Café Tato and the current generation has branched out—besides Petisco, the brothers run the Goan Masak in Panaji, and Vida in Margao.

A few enterprising Goans have transformed Goa's old taverns into exciting bars offering finger food, local drinks and a thriving community space. Down the road from the famous Joseph Bar is its sister concern, Miski Bar (Panaji). In the north are the popular Peter Tavern (Mapusa) and Cajy Bar (Arpora), and in the south, Feli (Benaulim).

Though South Goa hasn't had as many new launches, making the trip there offers some culinary rewards. Like The Den, a cocktail and cigar lounge (Navelim); the all-day breakfast and bar Beno (Benaulim), the modern-Indian Juju (Colva) and Chef Avinash Martins' Cavatina Cucina (Benaulim) with its reimagined Goan food.

Experience on a plate

Goa's culinary offerings go beyond restaurants. And some of the most memorable experiences happen beyond four walls.

Shankhwalker curates an elaborate lunch at her farmhouse showcasing Goan Saraswat food. In Loutolim, friends Crescy Baptista and Oliver

Clockwise from far left, Ramen bowl at Sake, Assagao; traditional Goan prawn curry; Vida in Margao; Table in the Hills, Velim; thalis at the redefined shack, Slow Tide, Anjuna; Chef Avinash Martins serving tamatache saar at his Table in The Hills, the kitchen he set up