Water Baby

Actor Rakul Preet Singh loves being with people on her holidays. As for destinations, the more exotic the better

Photograph by BANDEEP SINGH

Your work takes you places. Do you set aside time to explore the sights?

I do now, but when I started working, I didn't. After 3–4 years of working, I realised I need to make the time because it's not every day that you visit such exquisite locations. Now if I'm shooting in a place I haven't explored, I try to set aside at least two days to do so. The last time it was Scotland.

What is your idea of a perfect getaway?

I am a total water baby so it has to be a beach. One where there's a lot of adventure involved like scuba diving, snorkelling or jet skiing—anything that involves just being in the water, really—is even better. Also, I am more a people-over-place kind of person, so the more travel companions the merrier.

If you had to pick a monsoon destination, what would it be?

I will admit that I am not that much of a monsoon lover because I feel you can't really enjoy the destination in that season. But I feel Goa is beautiful during the rains. Also, the drive to Lonavala and Karjat from Mumbai is sylvan.

What essentials do you always carry on holiday?

My sunglasses, sunscreen and hats. If it's a beach, then bikinis and comfy chappals. And, of course, my phone.

Your most memorable trip so far?

Finland. It was such a special experience. I went there recently to see the Northern Lights and it was totally magical. We trekked there in -20 degrees to see the frozen waterfalls, we rode with the huskies... it was just surreal.

with Suhani Singh