Prakrit Bhasha,Prachin Nyaya Vaisheshik, Sankhya Yoga, Jain Darshan, Mimansa, Advaita Vedanta, Vishishtadvaita Vedanta, Sarva Darshan*

a student from opting for a different undergraduate course or stream. And if the subject one wants to pursue is not on the list of 27, then one can take the test in the most relevant of the available subjects. For instance, someone who seeks to pursue biochemistry may choose to take the test in biology.

The NTA portal will have a drop-down menu with a list of all participating universities and their courses. As each university can determine the criteria for admission to a particular course, students need to check out the websites of every varsity they are interested in and work out a list of subjects to be taken at CUET based on eligibility criteria for the courses of their choice. There is no limit on the number of universities and courses a student can apply for. Those who have passed the 12th board in previous years can also take the test if any university permits them to apply for its courses.

According to the UGC, the syllabus will be same as the NCERT curriculum. So, will students from boards that use NCERT textbooks have an advantage? The UGC chairman doesn't think so. He believes that once further details are out, the test will prove to be inclusive in the true sense. "The test will be based on the Class XII NCERT syllabus, not
