

A chakravartin or ‘universal ruler’, representing the perfect monarch, together with the seven symbols of his reign, including his queen, heir, counsellor, the wheel of the moral law, precious jewel, horse and elephant. In this delicately incised slab from the much-damaged Buddhist stupa of Jaggayyapetta in the Krishna River valley the chakravartin raises his hand to cause gold to rain down from heaven. (From a drawing by James Burgess following his excavation of the site in 1882.)
