Avalokiteshvara and not Shiva who is credited with teaching Agastya the Tamil language.[16]

A damaged but rare example of early South Indian Chola ‘bronze casting’ in the form of a seventh-century copper alloy statuette of Avalokiteshvara from the Krishna River region, obtained by Robert Sewell from an unknown source and later sold by him to the Victoria and Albert Museum for £3 in 1914.

The Pallava alliance with Lanka gave Narasimhavarman and his successor Parameswaravarman the security to