

Detail of an eighteenth-century map of India drawn in 1715 to show the empire of the Great Mogul, referring to the Mughal Empire. Shown on the Coromandel coast are the Dutch trading ports of Negapatan (Nagapattinam) and Pellicate (Pulicat), and the EICo's increasingly important 'factories' at Fort St George (afterwards Madras and now Chennai), and Fort St David at Cuddalore (wrongly marked as 'Fort St Davies'), which became the headquarters of the EICo in South India in 1723, only to be twice captured by the French, with their base at Pondicherry, marked 'Pondicheri'.
