16 Max Müller, Biographical essays, 1884.

17 Quoted in Dr Zareer Masani, ‘The saffron censorship that governs India’, in the Independent, 26 March 2015.

18 V. D. Savarkar, Samagra Savarkar vangmaya, Vol. 3, 1927.

19 M. S. Golwalkar, Bunch of Thoughts, 1942. But see William Dalrymple, Koenraad Elst, Arundhati Roy and many others.

20 S. R. Goel, How I Became a Hindu, 1982, rev. 1993.

21 Raj Sharma, The Caste System: a Report, c. 2008.

22 A roll of honour from nineteenth-century Germany alone would have to include, in addition to those already named, such luminaries as Peter von Bolen, Otto von Böhtlink, Paul Deussen, Martin Haug, Alfred Hillebrandt, Franz Kielhorn, Heinrich Lüders, Gustav Oppert, Richard Pischel, Rudolf von Roth, Lucian Scherman, Leopold von Schroeder, Adolf Stenzler, Albrecht Weber and Ernst Windisch. This tradition of German Indology has continued to the present day, thanks to the ongoing scholarship of such modern academics as Professors Oscar von Hinüber, Klaus Klostermaier, Herman Kulke, Lothar Lutze, Annette Schmiedchen, Heinrich von Stietencron, Michael Witzel and the leading authority on Ashokan edicts and sites, Harry Falk.

23 Max Müller, ‘Lecture 1. What can India teach us?’ Gifford Lectures, 1883. When that great Indian reformer Swami Vivekananda met Professor Müller in Oxford in 1894 he was moved to describe the meeting as a ‘revelation’, going on to declare: ‘His long and arduous task of exciting interest, overriding opposition and contempt, and at last creating a respect for the thoughts of the sages of ancient India – the trees, the flowers, the calmness, and the clear sky – all these sent me back in imagination to the glorious days of ancient India, the days of our brahmarshis and rajarshis, the days of the great vanaprasthas, the days of Arundhatis and