India remained locked in the hunter-gathering phase until comparatively recent times. Yet when that transition to the Neolithic phase began it did so with one mighty bang – although none of it was in the South.