Mirza Aziz Koka (1542–1624): Milk brother of Akbar, titled khan azam or azam khan. Favourite of Akbar's due to the Padshah's love for his mother, Jiji Anaga. An orthodox Muslim man, initially critical of Akbar's religious policies. Went to Mecca because he was angry with Akbar but returned chastised and became a disciple of Akbar's sulh kul. Survived into Jahangir's reign.

Abdur Rahim (1556–1627): Son of Bairam Khan and his Mewati wife. Distinguished courtier and khankhanan at Akbar's court, ataliq to Salim, accomplished poet, and a great patron of poetry and literature. Was sent to the Deccan on campaigns with Murad, then Daniyal. Akbar gave him the title 'Mirza Khan'.

Salim (1569–1627): Akbar's eldest son, called Shaikhu Baba by his father. Initially the chosen heir, and favoured by Akbar. Always had the support of the powerful women of the Mughal harem such as Salima Sultan Begum, Hamida Banu, and Gulbadan. Gradually started gathering his own coterie of disaffected noblemen as Akbar began favouring his other sons and grandsons. Rebelled in 1600 and set up an independent court at Allahabad. Forgiven by Akbar, he became Padshah Jahangir upon the death of his father in 1605.

Murad (1570–1599): Akbar's son. Sent to the Deccan to subdue Ahmadnagar. Died of alcoholism.

Daniyal (1572–1605): Akbar's son, died of alcoholism.

Khusrau (1587–1622): Salim and Man Bai's son. Supported by an alliance of Aziz Koka and Man Singh to oppose Salim's claim to the throne.

Khurram (1592–1666): Salim and Jagat Gosain's son. Akbar's favourite grandson. The future Padshah Shah Jahan.

THE RAJPUTS

Raja Bharmal Kachhwaha (1498–1574): Ruler of Amer, father of Harkha Bai. Arguably changed the fortunes of the Kachhwahas by marrying a daughter to Akbar. Officer at the Mughal court.

Raja Bhagwant Das (1527–1589): Son of Raja Bharmal. Became a high mansabdar and was appointed guardian of the harem at the end of his life.
