walked on foot to Hazrat Khwaja's dargah. He presented Daud Khan's kettledrums, which became part of the dargah's naqqara khana, and every day while the Padshah remained, 'seances for dancing and sufism took place'. In the cool winter evenings, the qawwals sang their songs of ecstatic love, accompanied by the syncopated claps of the accompanists, and gold coins glittering with starlight as they were flung over the singers. Finally, in January 1575, after an absence of seven months, during which he had 'done the work of many years in conquering new countries, administering the old', according to an admiring Abu'l Fazl, Akbar returned to Fatehpur Sikri.

*Considered one of Akbar's best officers, Sadiq Khan was made a high mansab of 5,000 and appointed Governor of Shahpur.