times that of the Ottoman Empire, there was no longer any need for Ottoman recognition, for the Mughal name was lustrous enough.*

*Present in India since possibly the fourteenth century, the war rocket was now made of metal instead of wood or paper, allowing for a larger payload.

*As has been noted earlier, Eaton quotes an observer who, in 1615, estimated the Mughals' annual revenue at 120 million silver coins compared to forty-five million for the Ottoman Empire. (See India in the Persianate Age, p. 371.)
