to Amer. The residents and officials at Amer, too, would have been informed of the sad news as Amer and the Mughal court were linked by an incredibly swift and reliable system of news carriers.

Raja Bhagwant Das’s body was taken to his watan jagir where his last rites were conducted at Amer and his ashes interred in the royal cemetery. Akbar sent a teeka to Amer and, in a formal coronation ceremony, the kuar became Raja Man Singh with a mansab of 5,000, the highest in the land. With the blessings of the Padshah and buttressed by the wealth of the empire, Raja Man Singh would be instrumental in taking Mughal culture to the most distant outposts of the empire, in his unique position as both Mughal mansabdar and Hindu raja.
