ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Writing is a contrary thing. It is at once a deeply solitary activity but also, especially in the case of narrative history, profoundly connected to existing scholarship and the help of generous experts in the field. Giants in the field of history have written about various aspects of the Mughal Empire and this book could never have been written without relying on their work—these are all included in the bibliography for interested readers.

Many other people have helped me, in ways little and large. They have shared insights and recipes, offered solutions, encouragement, and sustenance of all sorts.

My grateful thanks to Mini Menon, Professor Mubarak Ali, Professor Giles Tillotson, Aparna Andhare, Arpana Bhargava, Professor Catherine Asher, Paul Abraham, Colleen Taylor Sen, Professor Ruby Lal, Manu S. Pillai, Zareen Bukhari, Professor Harbans Mukhia, Lavneet Gyani, Dr Karni Jasol and Dr Mahendra Singh Tanwar from the Mehrangarh Museum, Jodhpur, Karamjeet Malhotra, Rachna and David Davidar, Ayesha Mago, Caroline and Ashwin Juneja, Anjuli Bhargava, Air Marshal Brijesh Dhar Jayal and Mrs Manju Jayal, Rathin and Juhi Mathur, and Mandira Mohan.

All the recipes in this book are dedicated to Marryam Reshii, writer and food blogger, who hoped for a book that she could ‘sink her teeth into’. She offered encouragement and warm support to a perfect stranger, for which I am enormously grateful.

Special thanks to Rana Safvi, writer, blogger, and all-round repository of Delhi’s unique culture. She is the embodiment of the Ganga-Jamuni tehzeeb and has been a most generous friend and mentor.

To Kavita Singh, art historian and professor at JNU, heartfelt thanks. She has shown patience and generosity to a persistent and pesky stranger, above and beyond the call of duty. I am truly grateful to the insights and tips she has shared unstintingly with me.

Huge thanks to the entire team at Aleph Book Company, who have been caught up in producing this rambling monster of a book. Thanks to Pujitha Krishnan, Simar Puneet, Isha Banerji, Aienla Ozukum, Bena Sareen, and Vasundhara Raj Baigra.
