Umayya frees Umar, who has been imprisoned by Iraj, c. 1557–77, from the Hamzanama. Courtesy Museum of Applied Arts, Vienna.
The siege of Chittor. Courtesy Wikimedia Commons.
The qumargha or ring hunt. Courtesy Wikimedia Commons.
Akbar's sword. Courtesy Xenophon/Creative Commons.
Weaponry from the Ain-i Akbari. Courtesy Wikimedia Commons.
Akbar's personal moulded armour made of Damascus steel. Courtesy the Trustees of the Chhatrapati Shivaji Maharaj Vastu Sangrahalaya, Mumbai.
Elephant armour. Courtesy Gilgamesh/Creative Commons.
Detail from the Battle of Sarnal. Courtesy Wikimedia Commons.
The diwan-e-khas building at Fatehpur Sikri. Courtesy the author.
Akbar visits the tomb of Khwaja Muinuddin Chishti at Ajmer, c. 1562. Courtesy Wikimedia Commons.
Birth of Akbar's first son, Salim. Courtesy Wikimedia Commons.
Akbar receiving his sons at Fatehpur Sikri after the Gujarat campaign. Courtesy Wikimedia Commons.
Detail from the battle scene with boats on the Ganga, 1565. Courtesy Wikimedia Commons.
Akbar holds a religious assembly at Fatehpur Sikri. Courtesy Wikimedia Commons.
Coins from Akbar's empire. Courtesy Sarmaya India.
The Battle of Haldighati. Courtesy Wikimedia Commons.
Folio from the Mewar Ramayan, c. 1650s. Courtesy Wikimedia Commons.
Akbar in disguise visits Swami Haridas with Tansen, Kishangarh, Rajasthan, 1760. Courtesy Wikimedia Commons.
Folio from the Razmnana, the Mahabharat in Persian. Courtesy Wikimedia Commons.
Heavenly Joys come to Earth—attributed to Khem Karan. Courtesy Wikimedia Commons.
Folio from the Persian translation of the Ramayan. Courtesy Wikimedia Commons.
The young artist Abu'l Hasan. Courtesy Wikimedia Commons.
A portrait of Manohar. Courtesy Wikimedia Commons.
Farrukh Beg, self-portrait. Courtesy Wikimedia Commons.
Folio from the Baburnama. Courtesy Wikimedia Commons.
Abu'l Fazl presenting the Akbarnama to Akbar. Courtesy Wikimedia
Babur crossing the River Son. Courtesy Wikimedia Commons.