that caused Akbar to explode into action. The unlikely cause of Akbar's provocation involved a singer and aesthete and in the dynamics that led to his fall, it was Maham Anaga's family that paid the price, its power destroyed almost overnight.

*The position of wakil was superior to the other four main offices of the Mughal Empire viz. the diwan or wazir (chief minister), the mir bakshi (minister of military affairs), the mir saman (minister of the imperial household including karkhanas, workshops) and the sadr (minister of religious matters).

*Parganas were sometimes called mahals. A number of parganas together made up the sarkars, or districts, which were in turn organized within a subah, or governorship.

*A millennial movement, brought about by the end of the first Islamic millennium.

*Some of those men, such as Abdullah Sultanpuri, then became part of Akbar's ulema.

*Hisar Firoza was an important outpost along the edge of Rajasthan in the northwest.

*A khanqah was the place where a Sufi saint lived and from where he spread his teachings. It was considered a spiritually holy place.