KEY TAKEAWAYS

- The backlog of cases is reflective of people's faith in courts. The judge to population ratio in India is not commensurate with what it should be in a country like ours. There is also dearth of infrastructure in the district judiciary
- The collegium system was devised to ensure the independence of the judiciary, which is of cardinal value, and to insulate it from outside influences
- The Indian judiciary has to be transformed through technology. The current model of judicial administration is based on the colonial model. It has to be Indianised. Justice is not just a sovereign function but also an essential service we provide our citizens
- No case is ever too big or ever too small. The smallest grievance of the citizen should command the same respect as an important constitutional issue
