

> In Afghanistan, our story is beyond just the Hijab. Yes, the women want to wear the scarf, but they also want to go to office, to go to school, to go to university, they want to be able to be respected as a human being

FAWZIA KOOFI
Afghan Political Leader and Activist

> I work with women in 40 countries and what we are saying is: 'Leave us alone.' My body, what I wear, how I deal with my reproductive rights are my choices

SANAM NARAGHI ANDERLINI
Iranian peace activist and Founder, International Civil Society Action Network

> Feminism means something very western and alien, but Islamic feminism is talking about the original divine text, the tradition of Sunnah and Hadith and not allowing the clergy to monopolise it for their own patriarchal ways

SHEEBA ASLAM FEHMI
Islamic Feminist, Scholar, Columnist

KEY TAKEAWAYS

- Women should have the right to make choices for themselves, be it about their clothes or reproductive rights
- Focusing attention on the hijab snatches attention away from other women's issues such as education and human rights
- Western feminism is not rooted within the cultural framework of Islam and feminism needs to be seen from an Islamic lens too
- Social archaeology should bring back the real narrative of Muslim women, that they are not objects meant to be hidden
- Globally, everyone should stand against misinterpretation of cultural and religious beliefs meant to oppress women
