and needs. They are liable to change and development just as human life is. Moreover, it should be remembered that some of the most interesting institutions of the present day are still experiments. Time must elapse before they could be declared to be successful and in the meantime, we should not mortgage our intellect anywhere. My own view is to work out a synthesis of all that is useful and good in the different movements that we see today. For this purpose we shall have to study with critical sympathy all the movements and experiments that are going on in Europe and America. And we would be guilty of folly if we ignore any movement or experiment because of any preconceived bias or predilection.

I shall enunciate what I consider to be the essential features of the future, Indian Movement. Firstly, India must be consolidated under a strong central government before we can hope for an internal reconstruction and security from external attack. Secondly, a strong and disciplined party must be organised before we can hope for a national government and the entire nation must be brought under the influence and control of this party. Thirdly, this party must stand for the masses as distinct from the vested interests. It must stand for justice for all sections of the people and for freedom from bondage of every kind whether political, economic or social. In order to ensure justice and freedom for all, the party must stand for the principle of equality and work for the destruction of all artificial barriers whether of religion, creed, caste, sex or wealth. Thus it should aim at a really democratic state in which we shall all be equal and in which there will be no problem of minorities. I would call this party the "Samyavadi-Sangha" of India.

The immediate problem before this party will be to transform the Indian National Congress into an organ of the masses of India. Bitter experience has taught us that it is futile to expect the Congress to adopt a radical programme until we can first alter the composition of that body. I disagree with the communists when they allege that the Congress is essentially a bourgeois institution and is incapable of this transformation. To alter the present composition of the Congress however we shall have to bring into our fold the three radical groups in the country—youths, the workers and the peasants—and give them adequate representation. This will be possible only when the present Constitution of the Congress which is based on the British model, is radically changed. One of our immediate tasks, therefore, is to organise branches of
