and incalculable potential wealth, is the jewel of the British Empire and it is the exploitation of India in the past which has made the British Empire what it is today. Nevertheless, it must be said that so far Great Britain has exploited only a fraction of the resources of India's men and materials. A policy of full exploitation would have entailed more education for the people and more industrialization in the country and this the British Government has up till now hesitated to undertake. In the present war we have seen that the British Government has been able to exploit such parts of the Empire as Ireland, South Africa, etc. to the extent that she wanted to—and as the days roll by, she has been trying to exploit India more and more for her selfish purposes. There were some Indians who wrongly thought at one time that as the position of Great Britain became precarious in Europe, she would relax her hold over India and concede the demand of the Indian people for national independence. But quite the contrary has actually occurred. We now find that the attitude of the British Government towards India's demand for freedom has become more stiff since the war began. British industrialists and experts have, moreover, been sent out to India to exploit that country and even such pro-British Indian industrialists who are thoroughly efficient and competent and run such huge concerns as the Tata Iron and Steel Company of Jamshedpur, the Iron and Steel Works of Mysore, the Scindia Steam Navigation Company etc. are not given any share in the new plan of economic exploitation. Therefore, if we look at British policy in India today there cannot be the slightest doubt that England is determined to reserve India for her own, exclusive exploitation and that the Indian people will not be allowed to have either their political freedom or liberty to develop their country industrially.

Consequently, it follows that if Great Britain can somehow avoid a break-up of the Empire in spite of being defeated in the present war, she will get breathing-time and by exploiting the vast resources of India, will try again to disturb the New Order which will be ushered in at the end of this war.

India's freedom will make it impossible for Great Britain to raise her head again. And India by striving for freedom now can materially assist in bringing about the overthrow of Great Britain.

IV. Some aspects of British Diplomacy in the Present War