proper psychological moment for a revolution, but it was not availed of by the Indian people. A similar opportunity will come again when Britain receives another severe blow at the hands of the Axis Powers.

When the opportunity comes again and if it is properly utilized revolts can be brought about in the Indian section of the Army, inspite of the British personnel of the officers.

In that revolutionary crisis, the British Govelnment will have only the British soldiers to fall back on. If at the juncture, some military help is available from abroad (i.e. a small force of 50,000 men with modern equipment) British power in India can be completely wiped out.

VII. The importance for India of Japanese Foreign Policy in the Far East

The overthrow of British power in India can, in its last stages, be materially assisted by Japanese foreign policy in the Far East. If Japan decides on expansion southwards it will lead to an open clash with Great Britain. If war then breaks out, it appears more than certain that the East Indies and Far Eastern squadrons of the British Navy will, under the present circumstances, be no match for the Japanese Navy. And even if America comes to the rescue of the British Navy, a Japanese victory could still be hoped for. A defeat of the British Navy in the Far East including the smashing up of the Singapore base, will automatically weaken British military strength and prestige in India. India is therefore, intensely interested in the developments in the Far East. And since Japanese expansion southwards necessitate a prior agreement between the Soviet and Japan, India is greatly interested in a pact which will, on the one hand, expedite a settlement of the China Affair and will, on the other, enable Japan to move more freely and confidently towards the South.
