What makes me happy

RAJWANT RAWAT

C.P. GURNANI
CEO, Tech Mahindra

Work can be all-encompassing, taking most of our time. Although my work is my happy place, my biggest stress-buster is spending time with my family, especially playing with my grandson and sharing his curiosity in everything around him. The love of my family and friends keeps me grounded and makes me who I am. Their trust and togetherness gives me the courage to challenge myself, take risks and make bold decisions. I am pleased to have the opportunity to contribute to society's well-being through platforms like 'Titliyan'. The NGO is my dream project, co-founded with my wife Anita and aims to spread happiness and education among underprivileged children to give them a chance to realise their dreams by tapping into the positivity, innocence and curiosity they are born with. As IIM Nagpur's chairman and a founding trustee at Plaksha University, I also work with the young minds of the country. I walk through life as if each day is an opportunity to learn and grow. I believe each happiness of yesterday is a cherished memory for tomorrow.

TIPS FOR HAPPINESS

DR KEDAR TILWE

1. Focus on things you can control. In an uncertain time, the best way forward is to keep your sight firmly on those aspects in your life you can directly impact. This includes adhering to Covid-appropriate behaviour for you and your family
2. Listen to the right, reliable and authentic sources of information. Numbers can seem worrisome; so focus on following the right sources of information and implementing their recommendations
3. Practise daily yoga, mindfulness, and /or relaxation exercises
4. Enjoy the small things. 'Family' time, 'We' time and 'Me' time are available now, so make them count. Watch an episode together, play board games, pick up gardening or learning to cook
5. Most importantly, cultivate a sense of gratitude for the support in your life and express it to the people who matter. Maintaining a gratitude journal is a great way to start.
