intentions and objectives in invading Tibet, and its dangerous implications for India's future security', and more recently by his old comrades Jayaprakash Narayan and Acharya Kripalani, who had 'cautioned against appeasement and adulation of China'. Kamath himself, after a tour of the India–Tibet border in the summer of 1959, had said publicly that 'Nehru will have to adopt a firmer attitude towards China and her colonisation in Tibet must be exposed and condemned, just as he had criticised European imperialism in the past'. Alas, recalled Kamath twenty years later, Nehru 'pooh-pooh[ed] all criticisms of his China policy but even dubbed the critics as war mongers who were spreading fear and panic in the country'. Thus it was that in 1962, as a consequence of Jawaharlal Nehru's 'supine policy', 'our Jawans, ill-clad, ill-shod, ill-equipped were sent like sheep to their slaughter'.*