Coal India's offering in 2010. It also reportedly drew the second-highest number of applications ever, at 3.23 million, after Reliance Power, which got 4.78 million. Nykaa's IPO was oversubscribed about 82 times, receiving bids for nearly 2.17 billion shares compared to the issue size of 26.28 million shares. Together, the four start-ups raised Rs 1.2 lakh crore.

Punjab-born Goyal, 38, graduated from IIT Delhi to join Bain and Company, a consulting firm. In 2008, he founded FoodieBay, which made ordering food easier by aggregating food outlets on one app—in 2010, this became Zomato. The company claims it had 32 million active monthly users in 2020-21. As of March 2021, it had a presence in 525 Indian cities and towns, with 389,932 restaurant listings. While it had a footprint across 23 countries outside India as of March 31, 2021, it has taken a strategic call to focus only on the Indian market going forward. In 2020-21, Zomato had revenues of Rs 2,118.4 crore and a net loss of Rs 816.43 crore. What investors seem to be betting on are the opportunities before it. According to RedSeer, a management consultancy, as of 2019, Zomato had a total addressable market opportunity of $65 billion (Rs 4.8 lakh crore), growing at 9 per cent per annum to $110 billion (Rs 8.2 lakh crore) by 2025.

A former merchant banker, Nykaa founder Nayar, 58, took the plunge to become an entrepreneur in 2012. A graduate of IIM Ahmedabad, Nayar spent most of her career at Kotak Mahindra Capital and rose to become the MD and head of its institutional equities business. Nykaa has diversified from selling third party beauty products to launching its own brands and entering the fashion business. In the fiscal year ended March 31, Nykaa's gross merchandise value (the total value of merchandise sold) rose more than 50 per cent to Rs 4,046 crore. It's also a profitable e-tailer, posting Rs 62 crore of profit in 2020-21 on revenues of Rs 2,453 crore. In 2021, Nayar became one of India's wealthiest female entrepreneurs, with a wealth of $7.6 billion (Rs 57,000 crore), according to Forbes.

"Global investors are extremely optimistic about firms in India's tech sector. The valuations signal investor expectations and give these companies easy access to capital"

–RITESH BANGLANI
Partner, Stellaris Venture Partners

AMIT VERMA

ZOMATO

Deepinder Goyal, 38
Founder and CEO

WHY IT MADE NEWS

- Zomato's IPO in July was oversubscribed 40.38 times
- The demand for shares was the third-highest in the history of Indian stock markets

Building expertise and scale: In the startup world, it is quite common to see successful startups being acquired by other firms to add scale/ reach. Offline giants have also been known to acquire startups to build an e-commerce presence, as was the case in the Tata Group buying grocery e-tailer Big Basket this year. But for a startup to buy a brick-and-mortar firm was unheard of in India. That's what happened in the case of PharmEasy—in May, the company struck a deal to buy a 66 per cent stake in Thyrocare, a diagnostics chain, for Rs 4,546 crore, one of the largest deals in the healthcare space.

PharmEasy was set up in 2015, when, after a not-so-successful venture with dialhealth.com, Siddharth Shah, Hardik Dedhia and Harsh Parekh joined with childhood friends Dhaval Shah