Coonoor). Thanks to my friend Shikha Trivedy for believing I had a book in me, and to Sameer Manchanda and Piyush Goyal for always being there for me. I have been fortunate in my early years to have worked with editors and media leaders who gave me two rare gifts for a young journalist: freedom and opportunity. So thank you to Darryl d'Monte, Dileep Padgaonkar, Radhika and Prannoy Roy. And the legendary R.K. Laxman who gave me my first journalistic lesson: the art of communicating in simple language.

Most of all, thank you to my family. My daughter Tarini who taught me all I needed to know about how to use the computer, while my son Ishan kept reminding me of the need to be steadfast in my writing (I guess medical students learn to be focused at an early age). To my mother Nandini, indomitable professor, who is perhaps my biggest (at times, only) fan and who gave me my early learnings in life. To my late father, who was a champion Test cricketer and my hero. I wanted to be a cricketer; he just wanted me to be happy in whatever I chose to be. Shonali, Taimur, Aman, Mummyma, Chitra and Bhaskar Ghose—thank you all for always being there.

Last of all, thank you to Sagarika, beloved wife and friend. She is the original author in the family and I guess she had mor e unflinching faith in me than I had in myself that I could actually pull off a book. I can only hope that you, the reader, will be generous with this debutant who remains simply a newshound in heart and soul.
