is a mandatory course which instils in the participants core principles of self-learning and self-management by "doing, observing, reflecting and recording". Abhyudaya, on the other hand, is an experiential learning course in which participants mentor schoolchildren from under-privileged backgrounds.

"My experience at SPJIMR has been exhilarating," adds Ashok. "Even in the classroom, the enriching discussions about real-world scenarios have broadened my perspective." Global internships and experiential learning further enable students to apply classroom knowledge to real business challenges, refining their problem-solving skills. That's how, in a rapidly evolving educational landscape, SPJIMR is preparing its students to thrive with a comprehensive skill set that transcends traditional textbooks. ■
