everything; learning continuously is more important than knowing. In the new world of entrepreneurship, the availability of venture capital means the courage in your heart and the sweat on your brow matters much more than your surname. In the new world of talent, big or multinational companies no longer have an unfair advantage over smaller or Indian companies. In the new world of Foreign Direct Investment, 50 per cent of what India has got since 1947 has come in the past five years. In the new world of public capital markets, there is a considerable premium for growth and governance.

Most importantly, MBA graduates must understand India; the Sanskrit word Sthanabalam (not your roots but the inner strength that comes from knowing and marinating in your physical space) is of great importance. The success of the UPI (Unified Payments Interface), designed for India but adopted globally, exemplifies the concept of 'Build for Bharat, Sell to the World'. Addressing India's unique challenges can lead to innovations that are relevant globally. Tomorrow's leaders must craft solutions rooted in Indian realities, ensuring local advancement and positioning India as a global beacon for innovation.

We have five pieces of advice for MBA graduates.
