older. A "cool teenager" has never existed because when you are young, you define "being cool" as doing what most others do. But when you grow older, you realise that cool people don't do what others do. They dare to resist the warmth of being at the centre of the herd. Cool people think hard about who they are because they have learnt that "fashion means never having to decide who you are". Nobody says it better than Tagore: "Jodi tor dak shune keu na ase tobe ekla cholo ee", even if nobody walks with you, walk alone.

Finally, find something that's at the intersection of doing well and doing good. What will happen in India over the next 10 years doesn't happen once in a decade or a millennium, but once in the lifetime of a country. So, young people mustn't define success as being rich or good-looking; hitch your wagon to a bigger theme as there still exist mighty injustices in India: illiteracy, disease, malnutrition, poverty, corruption, unemployment. If you find something that allows you to do something well while also doing some good, no day will feel like work.

Life after an MBA is not the solving of a sum but the painting of a picture that depends on our choices. Whatever the other choices, we hope our new MBAs will choose courage and persistence. As poet Sohan Lal Dwivedi reminded us, lahron se dar kar nauka paar nahin hoti, koshish karne waalon ki kabhi haar nahin hoti (a boat that's scared of waves can never cross the sea, and those who try never fail). ■
