Adarsh and Mansi, a young couple, approached us with a very different kind of project—they wanted an entire home dedicated only to entertainment, rest and relaxation. They already have a home in the same building on a lower floor, where they stay with their two young children. So, they wanted a space that was separate from the family home where they could entertain friends, get in a workout or watch a movie. This project came to us in the thick of lockdown 1.0. While we had a completely free reign to do whatever we wanted with the space, we had to adhere to its primary purpose—to make room for fun, entertainment and relaxation.

Decoding the Decor

The living space has accents of sage green with a colour burst rug from Jaipur Rugs and furniture from Maanvi Homes. Large chandeliers from Moooi hang from the ceiling, and there is extensive shelving to accommodate the clients' large collection of books. The most important part of this space is a home office area, with sliding folding doors that open and close for privacy when needed. Mansi is a renowned psychotherapist and uses this space for her sessions with her clients, so privacy is a must. The kitchen is a bright, shiny blue with custom cabinetry and
