cites the figure of 13 per cent as the share of indentured migration towards Malaya from 1844 to 1938. In Sri Lanka, the figure would be less as alternative modes of recruitment started even earlier.

In Assam, indenture would last longer until legislative change.
73. Northrup, Indentured Labour in the Age of Imperialism, p. 67, considered inter-continental migrations. Personal estimates tally with this assessment since indenture during this period was a small portion of overseas migration to Ceylon, Malaya and Burma—the three key overseas destinations. Indentured migration to Assam was also less than 10 per cent of overall internal migration for work during this period.
