DEEPIKA SILAYCH
MD IN MEDICAL ANATOMY AND CURRENTLY PhD SCHOLAR, AIIMS DELHI

"I have been part of this premier institute since 2019. AIIMS has brought together knowledge, discipline and cultural values so well that you will see a bit of it in everyone who has spent some time here. We have almost every facility here at AIIMS"

There is also a strong focus on student wellness. The AIIMS psychiatry department is closely involved in running an on-campus counselling centre where students can go for support and advice. "Medicine," says Dr Lalwani, "is not a smooth journey, and there are ups and downs. It is important that students get the support needed to handle academic and professional pressures." New students, too, are mandated to take up a seven-day orientation programme that helps them become familiar with their peers as well as the campus.

Looking ahead, the institute plans to use technologies like AI to its benefit. A committee is already looking into its various possibilities, especially diagnostic methods. Scientific advancements are also being leveraged to expand teaching outcomes; the institute has not only developed an e-learning module but has also designed programmes that can be used by other medical institutes as well. Developing skills remains a priority so that such facilities can be introduced for both students and faculty. "I think all the requirements and the advancements in medicine that occur elsewhere can be found at AIIMS," says Lalwani. Indeed, that's exactly why even after nearly seven decades, the institute remains a paragon of medical education. ■
