Secondly, the Indian woman needs to gain ground on the distance between what her male partner receives in bed and what she does. A growing number of women are now unwilling to accept the centrality of men, and the whole drama of sex being seen from the male perspective.

> There's no reason why women should not experience their sexuality as much as men – as fully, and as often.

For them, TTK Healthcare has launched MsChief – an extensive range of intimate products like pleasure-enhancers, lubricants, stimulants and condoms that encourage the consumer to #ClaimYourPleasure.

"TTK Healthcare has always been the pioneering force within the sexual pleasure sector, spearheading change and revolutionising consumer behaviour. It is this ecosystem that the company sets out to expand with the launch of MsChief," says Vishal Vyas, Head of Marketing.

Unsurprisingly, these sex aids are flying off the shelves. And for good reasons too.

One, it is a fact that every woman is differently stimulated. This can make sex a complex business for men, which is why many women fake orgasm. Intimate devices, however, are designed scientifically to find and hit upon the pleasure spots, reducing 'work load' in bed.

Two, these toys make good companions for couples as well as for single women. Just like for a child, toys fill in the need for a playmate. As the woman indulges in solo play, they redefine the meaning of 'me-time'.

And three, these devices make you open up about sex. They open you up to discuss further your sexual needs and desires. This kind of conversation is indeed important to understand each partner better. It results in better performance.

MsChief adopts a safety-first approach to its products. Its entire range of products are extremely women-friendly even to those with an ultra-sensitive skin. All its accessories are made of body-safe silicon.

Additionally, its range of lubricants and condoms – designed to heighten women's pleasure - is absolutely free from glycerine, paraben, sugar and even artificial flavours or colors. This ensures utmost safety, particularly because products with sugar are known to increase risk of bacterial infections. Besides, each of them is subject to stringent quality checks before it reaches the market. Interestingly, some of them also come with unique all-natural flavours – such as, tea, peach, vanilla and citrus.

That's not all.

MsChief has discretion at the core of its offering. Its accessories are developed to draw minimal attention to themselves. Their external appearance is cleverly designed to match the generic looks of a typical lifestyle or self-care product. There are a couple of stimulators that are shaped like bunnies and can easily pass off as cute pieces of décor in your room. There's another that doubles as a body massager with a heating feature. The compact case masquerades as a woman's powder kit but in reality is a safe and secret storage space for condoms. And most importantly, each of them is packaged with tact and care, and they reach you through a delivery system that safeguards you from snoopy, prying eyes.

All products from MsChief are designed to maximize pleasure, either through solo or through partner play.

"MsChief rejects the idea that women should settle for diminished or muted pleasure," Vyas adds. "There's no reason why women should not experience their sexuality as much as men do. As fully, and as often. The purpose of brand MsChief is single-minded: address this inequality in the bedroom and close this pleasure gap for good," he concludes.

Technology levels this playing field. With the products from brands like MsChief, all that the woman needs to do is switch on the button and switch on her imagination. Result: A complete transformation of her sexual experience. They stimulate her erogenous zones and waken her to climax, or speeds her up to it, while delivering newer sensations that she may have never thought possible of receiving.

Consequently, they lead to more fulfilling lives. According to a 2017 study in the Journal of Sex Education and Therapy, women who pleasured themselves had greater sexual desire, higher self-esteem, and led more satisfying lives.

Brands like MsChief work towards building such a sex-positive mindset – encouraging women to be more vocal, aware and accepting of their desires. They are committed to normalizing sex. They reassure us that it is no more unbecoming of a woman to be sexually assertive and expressive about what gives her pleasure. And they package this idea in youth-friendly language and carry it to their consumers in the form of easy-to-use products.

They bring along more openness, more conversations, more fulfilment on one hand, and less stigma and less shame on the other.

> The purpose of brand MsChief is single-minded: close the pleasure gap for good.
