DAUGHTER OF THE SOIL

A vocal climate warrior, actor Bhumi Pednekar talks about sustainability and venturing into the hospitality sector in Goa

Q. Kaiā Goa marks your debut in the F&B space. What led you to this venture?
I've always been interested in the food and travel segment. I've been a keen traveller. I love good properties, luxurious as well as budget travel. I am a big foodie, so this is something that I was definitely going to do. Goa is where I belong. My village is here, I have a lot of family here. When the opportunity came along, I was thrilled. I resonated with the property and it's a great start for me.

Q. You've often spoken about climate change. How important is sustainability to you?
Sustainability is a way of life, the need of the hour and something I practise every day. What attracted me to Kaiā was that the hotel is trying to adopt as many sustainable practices as possible. I've not come across many properties in India trying to do that. For me, a collaboration like this was really exciting. It's my way of giving back.

Q. Besides trips to Goa, you travel quite often. Tell us about your last trip.
Travelling is therapeutic. I last visited London in June. I absolutely love the food over there, the city parks, the iconic spots, the art exhibitions and theatres.

Q. What are you currently working on?
I enjoy my work, and I'm fortunate that I have many exciting things in the future. You'll see me in Bhakshak produced by Gauri Khan, Mudassar Aziz's Mere Husband Ki Biwi and a couple of very exciting projects that haven't been announced yet.

with Joanna Lobo