Over the past couple of years, the National Law School of India University (NLSIU) has been working on a carefully designed expansion plan as a result of which its student numbers have increased dramatically. Keeping pace with that is a growing faculty.

For the first time in its history, the university will receive as many as 180 students for the BA, LLB (Honours) course in the forthcoming academic year, says Vice Chancellor Prof. Sudhir Krishnaswamy. Similarly, the student numbers for the LLM course and the Master of Public Policy (MPP) programme have increased to 75. In addition to that, this year, the institute will welcome its first cohort of 60 students for a new three-year LLB course.

"In the years ahead, we will be adding to these numbers," says Krishnaswamy. "We will add as many as 120 three-year
