The growth in student intake and faculty size will require expansion in infrastructure. NLSIU has embarked on a year-long project to digitise its library both the BA, LLB graduates and the LLM and MPP graduates was outstanding." The Masters in Public Policy programme, which was launched eight years ago, had its strongest season of placements in the 2021-22 academic year, says Krishnaswamy.

"So, I sense that, taken altogether, we have a very strong performance on careers and placements this year," says Krishnaswamy. "Our students are at the best firms in the country and many of them are clerking for judges of the Supreme Court. Two of them are in the top 100 of the All India ranks of the civil services examinations."

The growth in student intake and faculty size will naturally require an expansion of infrastructure. Krishnaswamy says the university has embarked on a year-long project to digitise its library. "It will be a completely refurbished new library with enhanced digital resources. We are scanning almost every volume of our library and this will just transform the way the legal material is accessed."

Along with this, classrooms and hostels too are being added. "All in all, we are setting a scorching pace of growth that we will sustain for the next two academic years at the end of which this phased plan would have been fully implemented," says Krishnaswamy. ■
