"My undergraduate years at Hindu were a rich, fulfilling and creative time. I founded the Creations 'wall magazine', directed the first National Scrabble Championships, and wrote the early drafts of poems of my first collection, The Lunar Visitations, there"

SUDEEP SEN
Poet and editor, BA Hons, English Literature, Batch of 1986

The follow-up to counselling is done by teachers," says Srivastava. "We also began yoga and meditation classes online, which have become very popular. They are free and voluntary and many of our students find them very useful."

This year, the college has tied up with the British Council and the University of York for a new exchange programme. Many students agree that their learning curve in the past year has been shaped by the continuity in new educational adventures. "There is always something new, something to look forward to at Hindu," says Srivastava. "We listen to our students and consider their needs while planning our extra-curricular exposure. The exchange of ideas between students, teachers and the administration leads to constant innovation and new possibilities, which is unique to Hindu." ■
