LAW: A LUCRATIVE CAREER OPTION

Law has evolved and grown tremendously in recent times. From small businesses to large firms to NGOs, everyone is hiring talented lawyers. The government has streamlined Law education by starting CLAT in 2008. According to the preference, students have the option to choose between a three-year law course following graduation or a five-year law course after the 12th. Students with an analytical bent of mind and research-centric approach along with argumentative skills may find law an apt and lucrative career option for them. Besides practicing in courtrooms, the career options in law also include working as corporate lawyers where they oversee mergers or acquisitions, draft contracts for clients and ensure regulatory compliance. They may also choose to work as policy researchers where they are required to analyze societal needs and consequently advise the government on various policies. Legal journalism is another career option that is gaining momentum in today's times. Law graduates may set up their start-ups and further disseminate international and domestic legal news. Additionally, the requirement may also be in the field of academia or the education sector where creative law graduates can facilitate sculpting the future of learning. Without a doubt, a law degree is a potent tool that offers numerous job opportunities to the degree holder. Depending upon their area of interest, students may choose an integrated Law program with BA, BBA or B. Com courses to equip them with relevant education in an encapsulated manner. Some of the career options after earning a degree in law include judiciary, litigation, corporate law, legal consultancy, environment law, cyber law and human rights law. The demand for law graduates in the country has led to the establishment of many private law schools. The private universities have not only diversified the law programs curriculum offered
