rainfall. Note that theses are the average annual salinity's, and as such, varies over differing time scales from site to site.

- In the coastal regions of Australia (not shown on the map) the salinity differs from the ocean regions and is generally higher.
- To the south of the continent the salinity of the Southern Ocean is lower. This is due to lower levels of evaporation and the input of fresh water from melting sea ice.