2. Faxian is variously spelled as Fa-Hien and Fa-hsien. Xuanzang is variously spelled Xuan Zang, Hieun Tsang, Hsüan Tsang, Hiouen Thsang, Hsuan Chwang, Hsien-tsang, etc. Yijing is variously spelled I Ching, I-Tsing, Yìjìng, Yiqing, YiChing, etc.

4. Professor Liang Ch'i-ch'ao (1873–1929) identified about 180 monk-pilgrims who travelled to India during this period. Yijing, Latika Lahiri (translator), Chinese Monks in India, p. xxv.
5. Among these were Siksananda, Isvara and others who helped Yijing with translations. Bodhisena (704–60 CE), a monk from Madurai, went to China and then to Japan, where he had a huge impact on Japanese Buddhism, including the founding of the still active Kegon school of Buddhism.
6. But even Yijing had heard of Chinese pilgrims visiting India before Faxian, so perhaps he saw Faxian as a pioneer for another reason: for also writing about his travels, returning with sacred books and translating them.
