10. Firishta writes, for instance, that in 1419, Vijayanagar's troops marched against the Sultan. 'The Hindus made a general massacre of the mussalmans, and erected a platform with their heads on the field of battle . . . They followed the sultan into his own country, which they wasted with fires and sword, took many places, broke down many mosques and holy places, slaughtered the people without mercy.' Three years later, a new sultan led a revenge attack on Vijayanagar. He 'overran the open country, and wherever he came, put to death men, women, and children, without mercy . . . Laying aside all humanity, whenever the number of the slain amounted to twenty thousand, he halted three days, and made a festival in celebration of the bloody work. He broke down the idol temples, and destroyed the colleges of the Brahmins'. 12. Such high numbers in the armies were reported on both sides by many chroniclers. Of course, all kingdoms stood to gain from officially inflating the size of their armies, and it wouldn't have been easy for passing travellers to verify them. François Bernier, writing in the 1660s about the army of Aurangzeb, who controlled far more resources and territory than Vijayanagar, reported much smaller numbers for the Mughal army.
