(d) The Jaipur State Railway
(e) The South State Railway

6. Southern Railway —Formed on 14 April 1951 by merging:

(a) The Madras and Southern Mahratta Railway
(b) The South India Railway
(c) The Mysore State Railway

Soon after the regrouping of six zones, their operation was found inadequate and some new zones were found having a heavy workload. Following expert opinion, they were split up further and three more zones came into being until 1966. These were:

1. South-eastern Railway —It was felt that the Eastern Railway had heavy workload and was divided into two zones. The former Bengal-Nagpur Railway was formed on 1 August 1956, into the South-eastern zone and the residual portion of the Eastern Railway into the Eastern zone.
2. South-central Railway —The South-central Railway was formed on 2 October 1966 by taking out the Secunderabad and Sholapur divisions from Central Railway and merging them into a separate zone. In August 1967, the Daund-Pune section of the Central Railway was also transferred to this railway. Subsequently, in October 1977, the Sholapur division, excluding the Wadi-Raichur section, was transferred back to the Central Railway.
3. North-east Frontier Railway —This was divided into two zones on 15 January 1958 on administrative and strategic considerations. The former Assam Railway (including the Cooch Behar State Railway) and Katakal-Lalabazar and Champarmukh-Silghat Railways, together with the Tezpur-Bali Para Light Railways formed the North-east Frontier Railway. The residual portion of the old North-eastern Railway was constituted into the North-eastern Railway . [131]

HOW AN ENTIRE TRAIN WITH PASSENGERS VANISHED UNDER THE SEA