When renowned costume designer Bhanu Athaiya, the first Indian to win an Academy Award, passed away on October 15, 2020 at the age of 91, her daughter, Radhika, decided it was time to open the doors to the warehouse in Colaba where Athaiya had preserved objects from eight decades of an eventful career. They included not just sketchbooks and costumes but utensils from her family home in Kolhapur, illustrations from her stint at Eve's Weekly magazine, the Usha Deshmukh gold medal she won as a student of the JJ School of Art in then Bombay and oil and watercolour paintings. Many of these treasures will be on display at Bharat Through the Lens of Bhanu Athaiya, an exhibition that runs from December 6 to 17 at Aguad,

THREADS OF HERITAGE

The third edition of Sutr Santati: Then.Now.Next in Mumbai showcases an impressive repertoire of India's contemporary handmade textiles

Following the success of Sutr Santati ('continuity of yarn')—a one-of-a-kind exhibition that celebrates India's contemporary handmade textiles across geographies and cultures—at Delhi's National Museum and the Melbourne Museum in Australia, the third edition is now weaving its magic in Mumbai.

Curated by textile revivalist and crafts crusader Lavina Baldota, the current showcase at Mumbai's National Gallery of Modern Art, on till January 7 next year, presents 125 textiles crafted by nearly 200 artisans, craftspeople, fashion and textile designers and artists. "On view is an elaborate selection of handwoven, hand-embellished, hand-painted, hand-block printed and hand-dyed creations, along with other innovative techniques. They represent one of the most prolific periods of artistic creation in India in the post-Independence period," says Baldota. "They are also a reminder of the country's pre-eminent position with regard to the design and manufacture of handmade fabrics for art, apparel, home furnishings and sacred use."

The current showcase features new artists and designers, including Himanshu Shani of 11.11, Rahul Mishra, Renuka Reddy, Anamika Khanna, Viraj Khanna, Sarita Ganeriwala, Sumakshi Singh, Parul Thacker, Rahul Jain, Nila House and Rooshad Shroff, among others. There are also contributors like Ashiesh Shah and Manish Malhotra who showcased in previous exhibitions but have returned with new creations. "In the third iteration, the exhibition brings in practices of textile artists in a more expanded
