Empowered to Change

Young Indians have high aspirations. They are empowered to demand change as access to the Internet and technology improves. The Internet and smartphones have reduced the information gap between urban and rural Indians. Both public and private sectors must collaborate to adapt business strategies and product/service offerings for consumers. In the coming decade, India will offer a plethora of commercial options. If investment in education, healthcare, research and development and infrastructure expands in sync with current growth, the changes in the consumer's income and predilection for consumption will provide several possibilities. ■

"Internet and smartphones have reduced the information gap between urban and rural Indians"

MANAN JINDAL, 18, DELHI

BTech Computer Science and Engineering, NIIT University, Manesar

RAJWANT RAWAT