INCULCATING THE JIPMER GENE

Tracing its origins to the 'Ecole de Medicine de Pondicherry' established by the French in 1823, as the first medical school in the country, the Jawaharlal Institute of Postgraduate Medical Education and Research (JIPMER), as it is called since 1964, has evolved with a unique medical education ethos. As early as 1977, the National Teacher Training Centre started training teachers in medical education and JIPMER faculty were motivated to carry out innovative teaching activities. What the National Medical Council now expects from its teachers was being done in JIPMER since the 1970s.

A thorough foundation of the basic sciences, followed by rigorous
