NO. 1 NATIONAL LAW SCHOOL OF INDIA UNIVERSITY Bengaluru

THE LEGAL LUMINARY

MOTIVATED BY THE OLYMPIAN MOTTO OF FASTER, HIGHER, STRONGER, THE GREATEST COMPETITION FOR NLSIU IS ITS OWN SELF

Set up in the late 1980s to transform legal education in India, the National Law School of India University (NLSIU) retains its premier position in the annual university rankings despite a number of law schools mushrooming in the country since.

This, according to Prof. Sudhir Krishnaswamy, the vice-chancellor of the university, has been made possible by building on the institute's strong legacy and organisational culture. "We had good founding ideas and we were able to refresh them and apply them rigorously, which is what has helped the university sustain its No.1 rank," he says. "Secondly, we have a very strong peer culture that sustains high-quality faculty research, writing, teaching and learning."

Currently, NLSIU has 45 full-time faculty and 790 students enrolled in the on-campus programmes. "In the past three years, we have put together the best faculty in law in the country," he says. "We have worked very hard on our teaching-learning systems, basic digital technology and our rigorous internal reviews." Building up faculty strength involved extensive outreach to draw talent from across the country and overseas. "There were good faculty around, but they were not coming back to India. We have put in place a selection process which ensures that the best

GURUSPEAK

"We had good founding ideas and we were able to refresh them and apply them rigorously. That has helped us sustain the No. 1 rank"

PROF. SUDHIR KRISHNASWAMY
VICE-CHANCELLOR, NLSIU, BENGALURU