When Geetanjali Shree won the 2022 International Booker Prize in May—the first Hindi author to do so—it was a matter of pride for everyone at her alma mater Jawaharlal Nehru University (JNU). Indeed, in the past year, the university has been particularly focused on strengthening its Indian languages courses, and the global attention following Shree's win has visibly boosted interest in the field. "We are very proud of our facilities for language studies. Last year, we inaugurated our School of Indian Languages. We decided to give a separate building, faculty and seats for Indian languages," says JNU V-C Santishree Dhulipudi Pandit. In the few months since the new school was commissioned, chairs have been found
