TODAY in association with CVoter, only reaffirms Modi's dominant (his critics call it domineering) political presence in the country. Despite domestic economic woes, his popularity ratings touched 66 per cent, an increase of 12 percentage points from August 2021 though not quite the stratospheric high of 78 per cent in August 2020 before the ill effects of the pandemic had fully registered. Modi also continues to be regarded as the leader best suited to become the next prime minister at 53.4 per cent, which is head, shoulders and hips above his nearest opposition rivals Rahul Gandhi and Arvind Kejriwal, both of whom attract single-digit approval. Even within the ruling Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP), none can match Modi's popularity, with both Amit Shah and Yogi Adityanath registering as blips in the distant horizon. He continues to be rated as the country's best prime minister since Independence. Atal Bihari Vajpayee is a
