d a w n of history. H a v e we had our day and arc we now living in the late afternoon or evening of our existence, just carrying on after the m a n n e r of the aged, quiescent, devitalized, uncreative, desiring peace and sleep above all else?

No people, no races remain unchanged. Continually they are mixing with others a n d slowly changing; they may appear to die almost and then rise again as a new people or just a variation of the old. T h e r e m a y be a definite break between the old people a n d the new, or vital links of thought and ideals may join them.

History has numerous instances of old and well-established civilizations fading away or being ended suddenly, and vigorous new cultures taking their place. Is it some vital energy, sonic inner source of strength that gives life to a civilization or a people, without which all effort is ineffective, like the vain attempt of an aged person to plav the part of a youth?

A m o n g the peoples of the world to-day I have sensed this vital energy chiefly in three—Americans, Russians, a n d the Chinese; a queer combination! Americans, in spite of having their roots in the old world, are a new people, uninhibited and without the burdens and complexes of old races, and it is easy to understand
