to it. Another and a major excitement had seized me, and I was again on a great voyage of discovery and the land of India a n d the people of India lay spread out before me. India with all her infinite charm and variety began to grow upon me more and more, and yet the more I saw of her, the more I realized how very difficult it was for me or for anyone else to grasp the ideas she had embodied. It was not her wide spaces that eluded me, or even her diversity, but some depth of soul which I could not fathom, though I h a d occasional and tantalizing glimpses of it. She was like some ancient palimpsest on which layer upon layer of thought a n d reverie h a d been inscribed, and yet no succeeding layer h a d completely hidden or erased what had been written previously. All of these existed in our conscious or subconscious selves, though we may not have been aware of them, a n d they h a d gone to build up the complex a n d mysterious personality of India. T h a t sphinx-like face with its elusive and sometimes mocking smile was to be seen throughout the length a n d breadth of the land. T h o u g h outwardly there was diversity and infinite variety among our people, everywhere there was that tremendous impress of oneness, which
