wise call it by various names." '

But that brooding spirit crept in gradually till the author of the Veda cried out: 'O Faith, endow us with belief,' and raised deeper questions in a hymn called the ' T h e Song of Creation', to which Max Miiller gave the title: ' T o the Unknown G o d ' :

1. Then there was not non-existent nor existent: there was no realm of air, no sky beyond it.

What covered in, and where? and what gave shelter? was water there, unfathomed depth of water?

2. Death was not then, nor was there aught immortal: no sign was there, the day's and night's divider.

That one thing, breathless, breathed by its own nature: apart from it was nothing whatsoever.

3. Darkness there was: at first concealed in darkness, this all was undiscriminated chaos.

All that existed then was void and formless: by the great power of warmth was born that unit.

4. Thereafter rose desire in the beginning, desire the primal seed and germ of spirit.

Sages who searched with their heart's thought discovered the